

Central Intelligence Agency

Washington, D.C. 20505

24 March 1983

The Honorable David A. Stockman
Director, Office of Management and Budget
Washington, D.C. 20503

Dear Dave:

Last week I conveyed to the President my special concern that certain proposals for changes in the Federal retirement system set forth in the Fiscal Year 1984 Budget would have a severe impact on the Central Intelligence Agency.

My concern is primarily over those changes which will force employees to work longer in order to earn a full retirement annuity. These changes directly impact on my responsibility as Director and our management of Agency personnel, both those covered by the Civil Service Retirement Act and the limited number who qualify for the Agency's special retirement system.

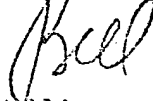

As far back as 1959, CIA established a policy which encouraged employees to retire at ages substantially earlier than elsewhere in the Federal Government. The policy was established for several reasons: to recognize those aspects of Agency employment where individuals serve anonymously under conditions involving personal sacrifice, stress, and often danger; to maintain a rigorous and productive work-force which is fully and quickly responsive to the Nation's intelligence needs; and to ensure an effective career development program which provides and manages advancement to positions of increasing responsibility. That retirement policy--which has served the Agency exceedingly well these past 24 years--remains an integral part of the Agency's personnel management system. It helps maintain the extremely high level of performance required by CIA's mission and responsibilities by providing the attrition necessary for both career development and recruitment of new employees.

Lengthening the service of Agency employees by as much as ten years would seriously impair the ability of Agency management to move promising individuals up through the ranks. Our mid-career personnel would be hardest hit by the retirement age increase and annuity reduction proposals, and we cannot run the risk that many might choose to leave now rather than face the consequences of these changes.

REFERENCE (ER)

You know that I fully support the efforts you and the President are making to cut the cost of government and it is for this reason that I was reluctant to seek relief from the proposed retirement changes. I fear, however, that the retirement age increase and annuity reduction proposals will make it exceedingly difficult for us to manage the CIA and to contribute further to the effort to revitalize and enhance the Agency's intelligence capability and product. The President indicated a desire to develop a method of preserving the special systems which have contributed to performance in critical areas and I will stop by after the Easter recess to discuss possibilities with you.

Yours,
